The Buddhist concept of equality is expressed in a sutra which says, “Difference is equal; equal means different.” Buddhism teaches that all beings are equal. However, this equality does not mean that all beings are the same. For example, a table is a piece of furniture on which to put things. The top of the table is beautiful and the legs are underneath supporting the top. The legs are usually not visible but there is no table without legs. The legs are just as important as the top. Each has its unique position to fulfill. There is no actual superiority or inferiority. All are equal. So it is with all things.

We live in a democratic society and this can be taken to imply that we are all equal, all the same. However, there is no democracy in the sense that all are literally equal. We are not equal in the sense of everyone being the same. It is only in a convenient sense that all citizens are considered equal. The President has his duties to perform and so does everyone else - congressmen, city officials, garbage collectors. Garbage collectors are just as important as city officials. If the garbage collectors strike and do not collect the garbage for months, the city would be a stinky, dirty place. Garbage collectors are important and we should respect them just as we do the mayor or governor. The work is different but the quality, the value, is the same. Difference is equality. This kind of perspective can be seen in the phrase, “byodo soku sabetsu” which says, “equal means different.” This view is also present in the Zen saying, “shiki soku ze ku” or “all things are empty.” Here, empty means everything. This kind of paradoxical expression is used to try and express the reality of things. Truth or reality is paradoxical. The ideas of right and wrong, for example, are exactly opposite, but right and wrong are equal or the same in the sense that if there is no wrong there is no right. Just as light and darkness exist only in relationship to each other. If there is all darkness, there can be no light. Darkness exists only in relation to brightness. Wisdom cannot exist without ignorance. Many examples can be mentioned. There can be no husband without a wife; no teacher without a student. It is because things are different but equal that there is a oneness of all things.

Husband and wife are different people; they have different personalities and usually have different domestic duties. The children are also different and have their different duties and privileges. Yet, wife, husband, and children together become one and form a whole. All are different but at the same time one and the same. In a family there are many members, but they are one in the name of the family. To realize this oneness and to live accordingly is the Buddhist way. This teaching is expressed in the Buddhist quotation, “One is many and many is one.” This kind of perspective or way of life can be extended to all humans, in all situations - whether people are joined together in a business, church, or country. And fundamentally, there is always a basic oneness because there is universal equality within life itself. (The Center Within, pgs 64 - 65)
Summer travels… opportunities to experience the Dharma in new ways! July found us on an Alaskan cruise—starting from Vancouver and going to places like Ketchikan, Juneau, Skagway, Glacier Bay, College Fjord and Seward. Then we took a train up to Anchorage and Fairbanks.

An Alaskan cruise is unique because it combines the luxury of ocean liner accommodations with being able to experience a great wilderness. Throughout the trip we saw wildlife like eagles, moose, bears, sea otters, and whales. At each port of call there were interesting land tours. We learned about the culture of the native people and the importance of their totem poles. We were able to hug Husky puppies where dogs were trained for the Iditarod race. We became familiar with the history of the Yukon gold rush and even panned for gold…combining the flakes we found into a small necklace pendant.

While at sea, there were numerous activities available aboard the ship. It was also easy to find quiet moments to just gaze out at the vast ocean. When passing through the Inland Passage, the shoreline is dramatically backed by a majestic mountain range. There were many moments that made me feel grateful or inspired.

As a practice of mindful awareness, I carried some pebbles from home—picked up from my backyard or from a nearby beach at Lake Michigan. When moved to do so during the Alaska trip, I made “offerings” of pebbles…leaving one here and there. Talking half to myself and half to the sea, I dropped a pebble overboard in a vow to deepen my spirituality. I left a pebble on a glacier, being awed by nature’s grandeur.

Later, after taking a train to Anchorage, I visited Rev. Tozen Akiyama, who had recently come from the Zen Center in Milwaukee for an extended stay to help further the Anchorage Zen Community. Together we visited the White Lotus Center for Shin Buddhism, started three years ago by Yuho Van Parijs and his wife Jishin (Diane). Rev. Van Parijs, originally from Belgium, is still affiliated with Jikkoji Temple in Antwerp. It is always a pleasure to get together with fellow travelers of the Way. What are the myriad causes resulting in a meeting in Alaska? It is said that we see only the tip or 1/10th of an iceberg. The real cause is the unseen, massive interaction of karmic conditions. How nice that the Dharma works in such mysteriously wonderful ways! To Akiyama Sensei and the Van Parijs’ I gave each three pebbles as an offering of gratitude and encouragement. I told them to scatter the pebbles in their backyards or wherever they wanted. The Dharma is alive and well in Alaska!

A significant aspect of our Alaska trip was experiencing icebergs and glaciers. On one tour, we took a helicopter and landed on the Mendenhall Glacier. We drank ice-cold glacier water and walked on blue glacier ice. Blue ice is ten times denser than ordinary ice like in one’s refrigerator. The locals said that when they use glacier ice at parties, the ice in one’s drink will last all night!

Dense ice reminds me of how in Shin Buddhism, Shinran said, “The more the ice, the more the water”—meaning that when the ice of bonno (human defilements) melts, water will flow compassionately. We humans have very deep bonno, so I could identify with the dense glacier ice. Even though there’s presumably great potential, one’s egocentric bonno is so slow to melt, we often get discouraged. Yet, as with glaciers, there’s always some movement, however slow, toward the sea.

When land glaciers eventually reach the sea, they’re called hanging glaciers. When a huge chunk of ice falls off a hanging glacier, an iceberg is born. This is called “calving” and when calving occurs, there is a tremendous sound as ice breaks off and falls into the sea. While our ship was in Glacier Bay, a hanging glacier named Marjorie did a calving and I heard the sound of an iceberg being born. The sound was powerful and unlike any sound I had ever heard before. I’ll never forget that sound. It seemed like Nature was calling out a birth cry to the Universe. At the same time, it was a coming home—a glacier’s long journey to the sea…then an iceberg breaking off with the great sound of enlightenment—knowing ice will become water, water into clouds, clouds making snow to fall in the mountains…and the cycle continues. So, although one’s self-centeredness may be hard as glacier ice, be patient…you are moving to the sea…in a majestic, awesome coming home.
This past spring, we sent out copies of the book, “Remembering Sensei” which paid tribute to the life of the late Rev. Gyomay M. Kubose. Touching sentiments were expressed in letters sent to us from people who had received the book. Copies of the book are still available. To request a copy, please contact the Kubose Dharma Legacy, 8334 Harding Avenue, Skokie, IL 60076. Some excerpts from letters we received:

Thank you so much for the wonderful book, “Remembering Sensei.” Such a touching memorial to someone who was so special to many. I deeply appreciate your gift. Rev. Kubose’s Dharma is truly a legacy.

Thank you for the copy of “Remembering Sensei”. I couldn’t put it down until I finished reading it cover to cover. Your untiring effort in keeping the light of the Dharma shining is very much appreciated.

Thank you so much for sending me “Remembering Sensei”. My parents and I met Sensei at Heart Mountain Relocation Center. He always had a warm smile when he greeted us at the Sunday services. I feel honored to have met him and will always cherish his memory.

Thank you for “Remembering Sensei.” My daughter said she read it all in one night and enjoyed it so much. I read and digested all the articles. I had to agree with what people wrote about him. They were all written with their feelings. I was impressed. Keep up the good work! We’re with you all the way.

Thank you so much for the book “Remembering Sensei.” I know I shall enjoy reading it as much as I have enjoyed looking at the wonderful pictures. It is really a labor of love. You did a great job of putting it all together. I still like to think of the last time I saw him when he was eating a cherry cobbler with ice cream on top. May his love of life be with us all.

I feel honored to have received the book “Remembering Sensei.” Rev. Gyomay Kubose was to me, and still is, America’s Shinran, founder of American Buddhism. His books, “Everyday Suchness” and “The Center Within” continue to guide me, and to remind me to live life to the fullest with gratitude.

Thank you very much for sending me “Remembering Sensei”. It was so enlightening on Buddhism in America and Gyomay Kubose and his entire life. Knowing him since 1927, it was a great pleasure to be associated with such a great man. I read the entire book in three days and am re-reading it again and again. I’ll have my daughters read it so they will understand why I believe in Buddhism in America.

Thank you so much for “Remembering Sensei.” It’s a wonderful book, a good lesson in courage, mindfulness, and acceptance.

Thank you for “Remembering Sensei.” I’ve read it from cover to cover. What an inspirational publication! Thank you, thank you!

We thank you very much for sending us a copy of “Remembering Sensei”. The legacy of your father’s life and all that he did for the furtherance of Buddhism in America. We shall add this very valuable memoir to our library collection. We trust that your work in continuing his vision for bringing Dharma to Americans throughout this nation will continue in the days and years ahead.

Doggie Dharma Treats

Never pass up the opportunity to go for a joyride. Allow the experience of fresh air and the wind in your face to be pure ecstasy.

When loved ones come home, run to greet them. When it’s in your best interest, practice obedience.

Let others know when they’ve invaded your territory.

Take naps and stretch upon rising.
Run, romp, and play daily.

Eat with gusto and enthusiasm.

Be a loyal friend.

Never pretend to be something you’re not. When someone is having a bad day, be silent, sit close by, and gently nuzzle.

Thrive on attention and let people touch you.

Avoid biting when a simple growl will do.

On hot days, drink lots of water and lay under a tree.

When you’re happy, dance and wag your entire body.

Delight in the simple joy of a long walk.

READER REPLIES

At my place of business, I call Dial-the-Dharma (847 - 677 - 8053) and put it on the speaker phone for my staff to hear. Some days they say, “Hey, can we hear one of those messages today?” I say, “Sure!” and I dial it up and we all enjoy listening to the message.  E.T. (Chicago)

I love the Dial-the-Dharma. I just wanted to let you know that I call on the computer all the time to save charges on long distance. Maybe those that don’t call because they are worried about charges could try that? DialPad, PalTalk, and others work well.  M.O. (San Diego)
Words of Wisdom

(Sayings from Rev. Gyomay M. Kubose’s writings)

“Each time we do something is crucial; Each moment is of unique importance.”

“Truth is conveyed not by words or actions but by life itself”

“Do not compare. One’s life is good - absolute good.”

Dharma Glimpse
by Brooks Iwamoto (10 years old)

It would be really strange if people weren’t different. What if everyone was the same? Josh would look like Matthew and Matthew would look like Amir. Everyone would have black hair and brown eyes. What if everyone was the same size? No one would be tall and no one would be short? Would everyone have the same name or would we just be a number? How would we tell who’s who?

It would be really strange if people were the same age. Would you be old or young? Would anyone ever get older and die? Will anyone get married? Probably not because everyone is the same and there would be all boys or all girls. No one would be smarter so who would teach? Would anyone have to go to school?

It would be really strange if this would happen. I don’t think I would like it. I want to live in a world that has differences. Even though we are all the same, we are all different in our own ways. That’s what makes this world great! I like to be able to tell one person from another. It would be boring and not very cool to be like everyone else. I like being me. I like being different. We need to be individuals. What do you think?

Brooks is the son of Glenn and Jill Iwamoto of Valencia, California. The above essay Brooks wrote for school was brought to my attention by his grandmother Amy Taniguchi of Fowler, California. When I read the essay, I thought, “this is exactly the Buddhist teachings.” Oneness is expressed through a sutra teaching that says “difference is equal; equal means different.”

This is also expressed in Rev. Gyomay M. Kubose’s article entitled “Equality” on the front of this newsletter. Thanks for your great essay, Brooks.

Keep going, keep going.. - Koyo
